Grants from the City of London Archaeological Trust

As in previous years, the City of London Archaeological Trust (CoLAT) is inviting applications for its grants for archaeological work in the City and its environs (up to the M25) during 2010. The grants will be awarded at a meeting in early December 2009, and be available for one year only from April 2010. The Trust favours research, publication, educational and outreach work, and does not normally fund excavation, survey or filling a gap left by a developer. The deadline for applications this year is Friday 16 October 2009, and applicants must also organise a referee for the application. For further details see the guidelines and forms on the Trust's website, www.colat.org.uk. This year, as before, London Archaeologist is also sponsoring research and publication work by making a contribution to the CoLAT funds for this purpose. Enquiries about eligibility or other aspects of the grants to John Schofield, Secretary of CoLAT, john@jschd.demon.co.uk or at 2 Carthew Villas, London W6 0BS.

Museum of London Acquires Huge Button Collection

The Museum of London recently unveiled one of the largest collections of medieval and early modern buttons in the UK. Over 2,500 beautiful buttons of all shapes and sizes ranging in date from the late 14th to the late 19th century have been generously given to the museum by Tony Pilson. Pilson has dedicated 30 years to finding, accumulating and storing the buttons, all of which come from the banks of the Thames.

Pilson's collection includes examples of buttons made of silver, pewter and semi-precious stones. These pieces offer a fascinating insight into the past including boxes of livery buttons bearing family or corporation crests and buttons with makers' names, initials and sometimes even addresses.

Hazel Forsyth, Senior Curator of the Post-Medieval Collections said, 'We've started to record each piece and longer term, we hope to produce an online resource with a small exhibition. The button trade in London has received little academic attention and therefore, we will set up various research projects to gain insight into the social and cultural life of Londoners.'

Website: A Vision of Britain Through Time

A Vision of Britain online is a free-to-use website which provides a wealth of information about the history of Britain. The site has existed since 2004 but a huge amount of new content has just been added and the website has been re-launched. On it you can find things like:

- Population statistics, including every UK Census from 1801-2001
- Election results from every constituency since 1833
- British administrative boundary maps
- 70 years of unemployment and wage statistics
- Dudley Stamp's Land Utilisation Survey maps and returns from the annual farm census begun in 1866
- Historic maps
- Travellers' accounts of journeys around Britain dating back to the 12th century

The website is funded by the Joint Information Systems Committee (JISC) and the University of Portsmouth. To explore the content, visit www.visionofbritain.org.uk

Modern Planning System to Conserve and Enhance the Historic Environment

In July Housing and Planning Minister John Healey announced new guidelines for councils and developers to make the most of the nation's historic assets like Victorian stations or our network of canal sides for imaginative new developments across the country.

This is the first integrated planning policy for protecting the historic environment, affecting archaeology, historic areas, buildings and landscapes.

The new policy, which is accompanied by detailed guidance from English Heritage, sets out that councils and developers should use the historic environment to stimulate and inspire new buildings and development of imaginative and high quality design.

Councils need to monitor all their historic assets, from listed buildings, conservation areas, scheduled monuments and archaeological sites and landscapes. Some historic buildings from theatres to churches are decaying with age and require quick decisions to secure their future instead of being left in place unmaintained.

The policy also sets out that the historic environment should be viewed in the context of climate change by encouraging the reduction of CO² emissions when decisions are taken about modifying heritage assets.

John Healey said:

‘Our historic assets are hugely important for local people and for the tourist industry and we need to conserve and protect them for future generations.

‘This means making these assets part of our plans for regenerating our towns and cities. If you’re redeveloping your town centre you should be making the most of existing streetscapes, canal side sites or former breweries. A prime example is St Pancras where the old station was transformed into a high standard railway whilst retaining Gilbert Scott’s original design.

‘We need to be protecting what is significant about a place while making the most of its potential and this means quick and imaginative planning decisions. Our new policy sets out that the historic environment is an asset not an obstacle to development.’

The new Planning Policy Statement 15: Planning for the Historic Environment replaces Planning Policy Guidance notes PPG15 and 16. It is accompanied by a Historic Environment Planning Practice Guide.

Culture Minister Barbara Follett said:

‘Historic places are a vital part of living communities. They inspire and delight those that live and work in them, and they attract visitors that boost local economies. This statement matters because it confirms the Government's commitment to preserving and protecting our heritage, and ensuring that it is passed on to future generations.'

Simon Thurley, Chief Executive of English Heritage, said:

'This is a major milestone in the Government's Heritage Protection Reform. I am delighted that this key element is now available for discussion and I welcome the policy's succinct but comprehensive re-statement of the Government's commitment to the management and protection our heritage through the planning system.

'A key shift in the Planning Policy Statement is that it encourages everyone to first understand what is significant about a particular building and site before implementing change. This should cut the number of poorly thought-through applications and ensure that our heritage can be made fit for a wide range of purposes without damaging what makes it special.

'Fundamentally, it will help owners of heritage sites and buildings to make better applications, assist local authorities in making robust decisions and ensure that future generations are handed on a heritage that is attractive, useful and relevant.

'I look forward to the discussions that English Heritage will be facilitating during the consultation period so that we can help make sure the Government's policy is fairly balanced and is as clear and helpful as it can be.'

The new PPS:

Ensures there is a focus on understanding what is significant about a building, site or landscape so that it becomes easier to determine the impact of the proposed change. It uses the 'values' approach of English Heritage's Conservation Principles as an underlying philosophy to inform decision-making.

Urges councils to monitor all their historic assets. For example, local authorities will be urged to create publicly-accessible Historic Environment Records which developers will be expected to consult so that they can take into account the historic environment impacts of their applications.

Supports constructive conservation. It encourages active exploitation of the heritage as an asset rather than seeing it as a potential barrier to development.

Introduces new clearer policies on setting and design, issues which are frequently the source of the most contentious cases involving the historic environment.

Puts the historic environment in the context of the challenge of climate change. Councils weigh carefully any loss of enhancement of the asset and its setting against the benefits of the application such as increased production of energy from low or zero-carbon sources. The greater the negative impact on the significance of the asset, the greater the benefits that will be needed to justify approval.

Deals with all types of heritage in a single document. It brings in a new, integrated approach to the historic environment and ‘heritage assets’, moving beyond the outdated distinction between buildings and archaeology.

Greater emphasis on pre-application planning and discussion. Councils and developers should learn about the significance of affected heritage assets before designs are drawn up – the more they understand the asset, the greater the chances of a successful application.

Maintains the same level of protection for the historic environment as the current PPGs 15 and 16 but expresses the policy much more succinctly making it easier for councils to use (number of pages has been cut from over 100 to around 13).

Provides greater clarity on key topics e.g. archaeological interest, conservation areas and their preservation and enhancement, World Heritage Sites, conflicts with other planning priorities and recording.

BOOKS AND PUBLICATIONS

Museum of London Archaeology Publication News

Here are the details of the latest MOLA monograph:

Roman Southwark settlement and economy: excavations in Southwark 1973–91 by Cowan, C. et al (2009) MOLA Monograph 42

This report presents an overview of Roman urban development in London south of the Thames. The establishment of the Roman bridge and the first approach roads and landing places made Southwark an ideal location for the development of facilities for the shipment of goods between land and river. A wide range of data from 41, previously unpublished, north Southwark sites provides the means for ‘mapping’ Roman activity in Southwark. It was an early trading settlement and later administrative centre, contracting by the mid 4th century AD to the area around the bridgehead. The book documents the changing patterns of land use and broader processes of social and economic change.

A new popular book is also hot off the press: Tracks through Time (2009) by Aaron Birchenough focuses on the archaeological work done in support of the East London Line overground rail project. To order, call 020 7410 2272 or email: booksales@molass.org.uk

University of London Forensic Aspects of Ancient Egypt Study Day 31 October 2009, 11am-5pm

University of London, Connaught Hall, Tavistock Square

The 21st century has seen incredible advances in our knowledge and use of forensic sciences – to investigate crimes and find out about people from ancient times. How can we apply this information to the people of ancient Egypt? Ever wondered how archaeologists work out the age at death of a mummy or skeleton? How do they know if the body is male or female? How can we identify people from ancient times? What diseases did people have? Find out from Joyce Filer, formerly Curator of Human and Animal Remains in the Department of Ancient Egypt and Sudan, British Museum.

Cost: £30 (inc. afternoon refreshments). For more information, please contact Richard Barritt on 07973 695168 or email rikki_promo@yahoo.co.uk. To book, send a cheque/postal order and an SAE to Joyce Filer, Accountability, 4 Lowndes Court, London W1F 7HE. Please note: places are limited so bookings must be received no later than 17 October 2009.

Museum of London
Conference: Pomp and Power – Carriages as Status Symbols
12 & 13 November 2009

To celebrate the installation of the Lord Mayor's Coach in the City Gallery in November 2009, in advance of the launch of the new Galleries of Modern London in Spring 2010, Museum of London will host a two-day conference about carriages as status symbols, and the influence of English carriage design and manufacture abroad.

The conference is organised in conjunction with Dr Rudolf Wackernagel who has widely published on the history of carriages and will be one of the key speakers. It brings together experts from around Europe and the USA who will explore different aspects of the coach building trade in London and examine particular coaches made in Britain and Ireland from the 17th to the 19th century. The social history of carriages will be discussed as well as French and British influences on British carriage design.

Tickets: one day: £40 (£20 conc.); both days: £75 (£35 conc.). To book, please call the Museum of London Box Office on 020 7001 9844 or email groups@museumoflondon.org.uk. For further information please email pomp&power@museumoflondon.org.uk

Lecture: The Cheapside Hoard. A Tale of Hidden Treasure, Intrigue and

Unsurpassed Magnificence

2 November 2009, 6.30pm

Mansion House

In June 1912, workmen entered 30-32 Cheapside to tear down timber-framed buildings that had survived from the 17th century and as they started to work, from a hidden casket 'a tangled heap of jewellery came tumbling forth'. From medieval times the heart of the goldsmith's trade had been on the south side of Cheapside with Bread Street and Wood Street and it was on this locality that this astonishing treasure was discovered. The 'Cheapside Hoard', the greatest cache of Elizabethan and Jacobean jewellery in the world, is one of the most remarkable and spectacular finds ever recovered on British soil.

The story will be told by Hazel Forsyth, Senior Curator of Post Medieval Collections, Museum of London, who is mounting an exhibition at the Museum in 2012 to celebrate the centenary of the discovery.

Tickets: £30, available from The Clerk, The Guild of Art Scholars, Dealers and Collectors, 28 Aldebert Terrace, London SW8 1BJ or email: GeorginaEGough@hotmail.com

EXHIBITIONS AND GALLERIES

King's Cross Voices Exhibition Camden Local Studies and Archives Centre Until 26 September 2009

King's Cross is world famous for its railway and architectural heritage, but until now very little has been written about its people - those who have both lived and worked in the locality, and perhaps out of sight and out of mind of the commuting crowds. Today King's Cross is in the throes of a massive redevelopment and is entering one of the most exciting periods of its long history.

This exhibition uses extracts from oral history recordings and photographs, collected as part of the King's Cross Voices project, to tell the stories of those who have lived and worked in King's Cross, both past and present. These include railway workers, students, shopkeepers, market traders, artists, campaigners, politicians, former sex trade workers, factory workers, housewives, publicans, and many, many more.

King's Cross Voices was funded by the Heritage Lottery Fund and the London Boroughs of Camden and Islington and received support from a number of other bodies. Between 2004 and 2008 the project was dedicated to recording and preserving the voices of King's Cross people. From the outset the recordings and items collected have been used in exhibitions, sound trails, theatrical performances, radio programmes and community publications.

Many of the interviewees were also photographed by a volunteer portrait photographer, Sarah Weal. Her portraits accompany the oral history extracts in the exhibition, together with a number of the interviewees' personal photographs, and some from other collections.

This special show will also include a listening area so visitors will be able to hear audio extracts of the King's Cross Voices interviews, as well as a display of rarely seen artefacts relating to the King's Cross area. Very soon the recordings will be available online at www.camden.gov.uk/kingscrossvoices.

Opening hours: Monday, Tuesday, Thursday and Friday: 10.00am-7.00pm; Saturday: 10.00am-5.00pm; Wednesday and Sunday: CLOSED. Camden Local Studies and Archives Centre, Holborn Library, 32-38 Theobalds Road, London WC1X 8PA.
