Milk Street Mikveh Goes on Display in the Jewish Museum

LAMAS members may recall that in an article in Vol. 52 of the Society's Transactions it was stated that the dismantled medieval Milk Street Mikveh (Jewish ritual bath) from the City of London was then seeking a suitable home. After some years of languishing in crates at LAARC, Eagle Wharf Road, this search is now over as on the 17 March 2010, England's only surviving medieval Mikveh went on display in the newly enlarged Jewish Museum, 129-131 Albert Street, Camden Town, London. Visit the website to learn more about the new museum: www.jewishmuseum.org.uk

LAMAS Local History Conference

The theme of the Local History Conference this year, on 27 November, is 'London Under Attack: Wars and Insurrections'. A booking form is included within this Newsletter. The conference is returning to the Museum of London. We are sorry to say that the ticket price this year will not include an afternoon cup of tea as refreshments have to be provided by the new catering facilities in the Museum. Picnic spaces are available for those bringing their own refreshments.

Ticket prices are the same price as last year i.e. £8 for LAMAS members and £10 for everyone else. The price on the day will be £10 for everyone regardless of LAMAS membership. Tickets may be booked online via the Local History Conference page on the LAMAS website (www.lamas.org.uk) or by post using the booking form to: Local History Conference, 22 Malpas Drive, Pinner, Middlesex HA5 1DQ. Please remember to include a stamped addressed envelope.

As usual affiliated societies will be able to book a table to display their publications etc. Only 20 tables will be available, one per society, on a strictly first come, first served basis. To book, contact the Local History Secretary (email: johnhinshelwood@btinternet.com or 9 Umfreville Road, London, N4 1RY).

Nicholas Fuentes 1934-2010

Members of LAMAS will have been greatly saddened to learn of the death of one of our Vice-Presidents, Nicholas Fuentes, at Kingston Hospital in May. With his passing another formative chapter in the capital's archaeology has closed, for London archaeologists have good reason to be grateful to Nick for the foundations he and others laid in the 1960s and 1970s at a time when archaeology was struggling to come to terms with the helter-skelter pace of modern redevelopment.

Having already formed an Archaeology Group from amongst Wandsworth Historical Society (WHS) members by the autumn of 1962, Nick (then Farrant) – along with Brian Philp – was contacted by Peter Marsden to help uncover the remains of a major Roman bath complex at Huggin Hill one frenetic August Bank Holiday weekend in 1964. This exercise led in turn to the founding of the City of London Excavation Group, later to become CoLAS in 1967. Nick, who was working full-time at the Bank of England at the time, regularly deputised for Peter in the City at weekends as well as directing his own excavations in Putney. He also led a team working under the LAMAS aegis at the Esso Oil Terminal, Bedfont in 1971-2.

Retirement from the Bank in 1981 allowed Nick to take up full-time education, which culminated in the award of a degree from the Institute of Archaeology, University of London. He was a keen member of the Ermine Street Guard, and founder and Chairman of the Roman Army Research Group of London. He also served two terms as Chairman of the WHS from 1982, and was an influential advocate for the establishment of a local museum in Wandsworth – pressure that eventually bore fruit in 1987 with the launch of displays in Putney Library (following various vicissitudes the re-vamped Wandsworth Museum is due to re-open in the former West Hill Library later this year).

There is little doubt, however, that one of his major achievements – and the one that many will best remember him for – was the establishment of the London Archaeologist magazine. The objectives of LA were clearly set out in its first edition in Winter 1968: ‘to publish interim reports and other suitable papers on the archaeology and allied history of the London region, to promote cooperation between societies, to provide an independent forum for discussion and to attract more of London’s population towards having an interest in the past.’ Nick successfully edited the magazine into the mid-seventies, and managed to secure articles from most of the leading London archaeological practitioners of the day. Only serious illness in 1997 finally forced him to relinquish his role as Managing Editor.

His attitude to archaeology, and indeed to life, is perhaps best summed up by the closing paragraph of his paper ‘Beginning Archaeology in London’ in the Spring 1969 edition of the LA: ‘The hunter of the grail is earnestly recommended to join his local society and to be prepared to play his part ... He should also join ... his county society which needs and deserves as much help as possible'. No one could ever accuse Nick of having shirked his duty in either regard.

Our sympathies go out to his wife Pamela Greenwood and son Alexander, who stood shoulder to shoulder throughout Nick's long illness and who provided him with unfailing comfort and support.

REMINDER: LAMAS Research Fund

The deadline for applications is 30 September 2010. For information on how to apply, please visit our website: www.lamas.org.uk or contact Jackie Keily (jkeily@museumoflondon.org.uk; tel. 020 7814 5734).

LAMAS on London's Timeline

Many LAMAS members will have visited the magnificent new Galleries of Modern London at the Museum of London, which opened earlier this year. Visitors may have noticed the Timeline, which is a rail around the inner wall of the new galleries showing a small space for each year between 1666 and 2012. Many institutions and private individuals have already contributed £5,000 each towards the cost of the new galleries, to 'own' the year which is significant for them. Their name is shown alongside the year, together with a caption explaining the significance.

As a mark of appreciation of the close association which LAMAS has with the Museum of London, LAMAS Council felt we should take the opportunity to purchase the year of our founding, 1855, on the Timeline. As well as publicising the Society it will be a way of acknowledging our thanks for the substantial help which the Museum and its staff have given to LAMAS over many years and continue to give. This includes the use of the Lecture Theatre for our two annual conferences and venues for Council and Committee meetings. Additionally, the Museum hosts our lecture series and provides accommodation for our library, business records and publications. Council took this decision after careful discussion and a vote which excluded the Museum of London staff who are members of LAMAS Council.

We are hoping that in a few weeks our text will be engraved on the 1855 panel and the founding of LAMAS will be proudly commemorated alongside the many other events significant to Londoners.

Victoria County History in Westminster – Get Involved

Get involved in new research for the Victoria History of Middlesex in Westminster where, following a funding crisis, work is restarting thanks to the support of Councillor Judith Warner, elected Lord Mayor of Westminster on 19 May 2010. At her election, the Lord Mayor made the exciting announcement that she would be supporting the County History Trust, which holds VCH Middlesex funds, as one of her three mayoral year charities. Everything raised during that year will fund research for our second Westminster volume, VCH Middlesex 14 – The City of Westminster: Local Government and Social Life, and contribute to the third volume of the set, on the physical growth and economy of the City.

Volume 14 focuses on the complexities of Westminster's local government and the social life of the local community. Work is about to start on Local Government, and we would like to involve experienced historians as volunteer researchers, following a successful model used in other VCH counties. There are many aspects that may interest LAMAS members, from the history of individual theatres, schools and municipal buildings to the provision of vital public services, and the development of charities. Our plan will be available on the VCH website (www.victoriacountyhistory.ac.uk) by September, and LAMAS members who would like to participate in research or fundraising are welcome to contact me: elizabeth.williamson@sas.ac.uk (020 7862 8777).

The first volume in our Westminster series, VCH Middlesex 13 – The City of Westminster: Landownership and Religious Life (2009) is the result of remarkable new research by former County Editor, Dr Patricia Croot. Boydell & Brewer are offering discount for LAMAS members until 31 December 2010. The offer price is £71.25 instead of £95, the offer code 10200. Order by phone (01394 610600), fax (01394 610316), email: trading@boydell.co.uk or online: www.boydellandbrewer.com. Postage is UK £4.00 per copy (up to £12.00 maximum), rest of the world £6.50 per copy (up to £20 maximum).

Grants: City of London Archaeological Trust

The City of London Archaeological Trust (CoLAT) awards small sums towards all kinds of archaeological work in the City of London and its environs (out to the M25). It favours archive, research and publication work; educational and volunteer groups; exhibitions and documentary research when part of an archaeological project. It does not fill any gap left by a developer. The closing date for applications this year is 15 October; the meeting to decide the grants will be in December, and the awards are available for one year only from 1 April 2011, so careful planning is required. Details, including application forms, are on the website www.colat.org.uk; guidance is also available from the Secretary, John Schofield: john@jschd.demon.co.uk.

LAMAS Local History Workshop: 2 October 2010

The first Local History Workshop in March was a great success and well attended by thirteen people from eight affiliated societies. A further half-day workshop has now been arranged, at the Museum of London, for 2 October 2010, to explore the use of spreadsheets for historical research. The workshop will consist of a series of activities to familiarise people with the use of spreadsheets: as a simple database; to organise and present data in different ways; to display data in graphical form; to perform simple statistical analysis.

There will, again, be no admission charge for LAMAS members or those sponsored by an affiliated society. The number of places available is limited to 16, and several places have already been taken up by people attending the last workshop. If you would like to come along please get in touch quickly with the Local History Secretary (email: johnhinshelwood@btinternet.com or 9 Umfreville Road, London, N4 1RY). Places will be given on a first come, first served basis.

A Newly Discovered Memento of Old London Bridge from Borough High Street, Southwark

During standing building recording of 26 Borough High Street, Southwark, a rectangular block of Portland ashlar was noticed in the rear portion of the building and recovered for study. This recording work was undertaken during 2010 by Museum of London Archaeology staff before the building's demolition and subsequent archaeological investigation of the site to allow the construction of the new Thameslink viaduct.

Set in the external face of the ashlar block is a small over-painted and only partly legible inscription. The gist of this inscription is that this particular block was built into a house constructed by Giles Berrett and laid by his son Crawford Berrett in 1832 and that this masonry had been taken from 'Old London Bridge, built ..., taken down 183..., by Act of Parliament 1823'. The size and geology of this block suggests that it was part of the ashlar facing London Bridge after it underwent a series of modifications during 1757-62.

The demolition of Old London Bridge in 1831-32 sparked a lot of public interest in its history and the sale of numerous mementos including furniture apparently made out of its timbers. Some of the buildings which were constructed out of stone salvaged from the old bridge, including Warden church tower (1836) on the Isle of Sheppey, Kent and the warehouse at Beaumont Quay (1833), Essex, possessed inscriptions proudly explaining the origin of their fabric (see Watson, B, et al (2001) London Bridge: 2000 years of a river crossing, MoLAS monograph, pg 168-69). Surviving fragments of Old London Bridge in North Southwark today include an alcove at Guy's Hospital and the royal arms of George II (1727-60) removed from the Stonegate and now reset in the façade of the King's Arms public house in Newcomen Street. However, this example from Borough High Street is the first example in Southwark of a single stone from the old bridge being set in a new building as a memento.

BOOKS AND PUBLICATIONS

The Priest and the Playwright, by M F Brown (2009), Pen Press, 182 pp, £7.99, ISBN 978-1-906710-63-7

This book is about the unlikely friendship between American socialite and writer Pearl Craigie, and a Scottish Catholic priest, William Brown, who established St Anne's church in Vauxhall in 1903. The back cover of the book describes Brown as 'reserved' though perhaps this should be 'forthright'. He was active in several ecclesiastic and other welfare bodies. Pearl Craigie was an American living in London, writing novels and plays for London theatres.

Their friendship was the stronger as both had converted to Catholicism. It was marked by almost daily correspondence, which Margaret Brown's book follows, adding explanatory detail and touches of hindsight; but mainly leaving their letters to speak for themselves. As well as adding to the history of Vauxhall, I can recommend the book as a good read.

Richard Buchanan, Southwark and Lambeth Archaeological Society

Horace Walpole and the Berry Sisters, by John Beardmore (2010), Borough of Twickenham Local History Society, 32 pp, £3, ISBN 978-0-093341-820-0

Focusing on the relationship between the multitalented Horace Walpole and the dynamic Berry Sisters (Agnes and Mary), this book presents an insightful glimpse into society, snobbery and friendship at the end of the 18th and beginning of the 19th centuries. Based on Beardmore's talk on the subject, his notes have been elaborated on by Ken Howe, producing an informative and approachable read.

The friendship between Walpole and the Berry sisters lasted just eight and a half years (between October 1788 and Walpole's death in March 1797) yet from it the two Berry sisters (who came from an unremarkable background) managed to cement themselves as London's social elite for the remainder of their lives. Beardmore explores how a seemingly incongruous grouping of two young ladies in their twenties and a bachelor in his seventies blossomed into such a close friendship. Much of the narrative on the Berrys' lives is interspersed with insightful and charming extracts from their letters, and the course of their lives is well researched, with particular attention paid to the relationship between the Berry sisters and their potential suitors, and the effect this had on their relationship with Walpole.

It is undeniable that the elder Berry sister, Mary, took centre stage over her younger sister Agnes, yet both were held dear to Walpole, who nicknamed them 'my twin wives'. After his death Mary published many of Walpole's papers and letters, and also began to publish volumes herself. By the 1820s the Berry sisters were famous, holding dinner and tea parties for well-respected and remarkable people such as Charles Dickens. Neither of the sisters, nor Walpole, ever married, perhaps explaining why this friendship, though lasting such a short time, had such an impact on their lives.
